— John Fowles, The French Lieutenant's Woman. The reason I am drawn to literature, to art, to books considered to be classics, is to watch some middle-aged, bearded man put on a pair of (excuse the flamboyant analogy) skates and suddenly pitch himself into the center of the ring and pull off a triple Salchow.

The French Lieutenant's Woman by John Fowles - Goodreads

In an essay, the reclusive British writer John Fowles (1926-2005) writes that his home town, Leigh-on-Sea, Essex, was “dominated by conformism” and the “pursuit of respectability”.

The French Lieutenant's Woman is the first book I read from John Fowles. I think it will remain as the single book for a long time. Fowles, an extraordinary author of his time, differs from other writers with his narrative techniques. If you like it, you like it, but if you don't, you may end up with mixed feelings.

The French Lieutenant's Woman (film) - Wikipedia

The French Lieutenant's Woman by John Fowles. But what trade! If you will excuse the overuse of exclamation marks! He owns department stores in London and is a man of considerable self-made wealth and his only daughter a worthy catch for a man, such as Charles, of greater class but fewer means. Ernestina's only drawback is that she is, as we now say in 2010, a bit of an airhead.
